PORSCHE

2020

Michael Mauer has been head of the Porsche Design Department since 2004. He studied automotive design at Pforzheim University of Applied Sciences between 1982 and 1986. It was under his watch that the 918 Spyder and, most recently, the Taycan electric sports car were designed, not to mention the current generations of all other Porsche series.

ORIGINALE 06 – the Porsche Classic catalog

Dear reader,

There is a guiding principle at Porsche that goes as follows: There is no future without a past. This principle underpins our design choices. Every new model must keep the link to the past alive. There's something of the 911 in every new vehicle, and every single one of them also borrows from the 917 or Carrera GT. Sometimes they are merely subtle hints, but they have a big enough character to influence the whole look of a car. At the same time, it's important for people to recognize at first glance that this vehicle is something new.

I genuinely believe that one of the reasons for the success of Porsche as a company is the fact that the brand has never stopped developing its designs. People have criticized it for not being daring enough at times, and they might be right. But if you look at the different initial designs for the 914, for example, it's hard not to be impressed by the courage with which F.A. Porsche sketched this two-seater. It doesn't get much more minimalist than those clean surfaces, with no beading. As far as I'm concerned, this is Porsche par excellence. The crest and lettering have evolved in the same way, preventing both from becoming outdated. It is still possible to tell immediately from the font that you're looking at a Porsche. But nowadays the letters have become more angular, jagged and modern.

Every single member of the Design Team is firmly committed to our history. Many of my colleagues own a classic Porsche car. I personally prefer the 911. My favorite is the 964 generation. I believe that this is the quintessential 911 from a design point of view, and the perfect blend of a classic 911 design with modern technology. My Cabriolet has now driven over 125,000 miles, so it's certainly not just a collector's model that sits in my garage. Quite the contrary. The 964 is made for driving. And one of my criteria for a classic car is that it must be a working vehicle. Sometimes this means that parts might need to be obtained at short notice. With a classic vehicle like this, it's bound to happen. So I like knowing that I can purchase genuine parts without any problems – direct from the manufacturer.

When it comes to design, diversity is what really appeals to me. I love seeing the huge range of classic Porsche model owners: the outlaws who modify their vehicles to get them just the way they want them. And the sticklers who believe in remaining 100% faithful to the original. The one topic of conversation that these two groups always have in common? The Porsche itself.

And that is a guarantee for everyone that these timeless classic vehicles will always remain a priority for Porsche – not just in terms of design, but also in terms of the availability of genuine parts.

Safe driving and have fun
on the road,
Michael Mauer
